Victoria Bagnall from Connections in Mind joins Dale in this episode to discuss ‘Executive Function Skills and Neurodiversity Traits’. Victoria tells us how an executive function approach can help humanise many of the challenges neurodivergent young people face. Building executive function literacy in a school can help all learners better understand their barriers to learning.

Victoria highlights what age-appropriate executive function looks like and how it always comes down to modelling. Listen to find out how to help everyone

December from 4:30pm-5:30pm, will cover best practice on supporting these children.
